Leah Feuerstahler is an associate professor at Fordham University, where she serves as director for the PhD program in psychometrics and quantitative psychology. Her research focuses on item response theory modeling, focusing on model interpretation and scaling issues, Bayesian and semi-parametric methods, and applications in psychology, education, and health sciences. Dr. Feuerstahler's research has been published in Psychometrika, the British Journal of Mathematical and Statistical Psychology, Educational and Psychological Measurement, Multivariate Behavioral Research, Applied Psychological Measurement, the Journal of Educational Measurement, and other leading journals. She currently serves on the editorial boards of the British Journal of Mathematical and Statistical Psychology, Assessment and Measurement: Interdisciplinary Research and Perspectives. Dr. Feuerstahler earned her PhD from the University of Minnesota in 2016 and completed a postdoctoral fellowship at the University of California, Berkeley.